

Addington Hospital accused of victimising workers Wednesday 2 December 2020 - 6:20pm Mlungisi Ndlovu, PSA's KwaZulu-Natal Provincial Chairperson, spoke with eNCA's Shahan Ramkissoo. Courtesy of #DStv403 DURBAN - Durban's Addington Hospital has been accused of victimising employees who exposed the health facility's shabby conditions. The Public Servants Association (PSA) said one of its shop stewards was suspended after raising concerns about safety matters there. Staff members have complained of ageing infrastructure and non-functional elevators in the 15-storey building that are reportedly affecting patient care. Patients and workers have to take the stairs as only one elevator is operational -- a problem ongoing since 2015. The union said no reasons for the suspension was supplied to them. A manager at PSA KwaZulu-Natal, Mlungisi Ndlovu, said "if they decide to continue to intimidate our staff we will follow all the legal processes in terms of dispute process." Source eNCA Related

Addington Hospital accused of victimising workers

Wednesday 2 December 2020 - 6:20pm

Mlungisi Ndlovu, PSA's KwaZulu-Natal Provincial Chairperson, spoke with eNCA's Shahan Ramkissoo. Courtesy of #DStv403