The Public Servants Association (PSA) is extremely concerned about the impact of severe flooding in the Eastern Cape, including Mthatha and surrounding areas, leading to fatalities, displacement of residents, and widespread damage to infrastructure and public service facilities.

The PSA extends sincere condolences to families who have lost loved ones and stands in solidarity with all those affected during this time of crisis. Considering the dangerous conditions, the PSA urges all community members to exercise maximum caution, avoid flooded areas, and adhere to safety warnings issued by authorities

The PSA further appeals to public servants to use their discretion when reporting for duty, placing personal safety above all else. No one should be forced to risk their life under unsafe conditions. Departments are reminded that special leave provisions exist to accommodate such circumstances, and employers are urged to act with empathy and flexibility, considering the severity of the current situation.

The PSA calls on all spheres of government to deploy emergency services and humanitarian relief without delay, restore access to essential services such as clinics, schools, and government offices, and protect the safety and wellbeing of all frontline public servants and affected communities. Urgent infrastructure assessments should be conducted and measures implemented to prevent further devastation.

This disaster underscores the urgent need for strengthened disaster response capabilities and long-term investment in resilient infrastructure. The PSA is available to engage with all relevant authorities and stakeholders to ensure that public servants and communities receive support.
